The Bluest Eye

A Realistic Take on the 'Beauty Myth'

A Critical Literary Analysis

Based on Toni Morrison's Novel (1970)

Gender Studies • Feminist Literary Criticism • African-American Literature

ABSTRACT

This study examines Toni Morrison's The Bluest Eye (1970) through the lens of the 'beauty myth' — a term popularized by Naomi Wolf — to analyze how Eurocentric beauty standards are imposed upon and internalized by African-American women. The novel presents a nuanced, realistic portrayal of how societal definitions of beauty function as tools of racial and gendered oppression.

Through characters like Pecola Breedlove, Claudia MacTeer, and Pauline Breedlove, Morrison deconstructs the ideological apparatus that conflates whiteness with beauty, desirability, and self-worth. This research investigates the intersections of race, gender, class, and aesthetics, and how female agency, patriarchal constraints, and moral authority operate within the text to expose the destructive nature of the beauty myth.

KEYWORDS

- Beauty Myth
- Eurocentric Beauty Standards
- Toni Morrison
- Pecola Breedlove
- Self-Worth & Aesthetics
- Internalized Racism
- Female Agency
- Patriarchal Constraints
- Racial Identity
- Gender Performance

INTRODUCTION

About the Novel

Published in 1970, The Bluest Eye was Toni Morrison's debut novel. Set in Lorain, Ohio in 1941, it follows young Pecola Breedlove, a Black girl who wishes for blue eyes — believing they would make her beautiful and loved. Morrison's narrative challenges Dick-and-Jane primer ideals and exposes the violence embedded in dominant beauty standards.

The Beauty Myth Connection

Naomi Wolf's The Beauty Myth (1990) argues that beauty standards are socially constructed tools of patriarchal control. Morrison, two decades prior, dramatizes this thesis with devastating precision — showing how Black women are doubly marginalized by both racial and gender-based beauty norms that they did not create but are forced to inhabit.

IMPORTANCE OF THE STUDY

01

Racial & Gender Intersection

Examines how race and gender combine to create unique forms of oppression rarely addressed in mainstream feminist theory.

02

Psychological Dimension

Reveals the psychological damage of internalized racism — how oppression becomes self-inflicted through the lens of beauty.

03

Cultural Critique

Interrogates popular culture (films, advertisements, dolls) as vehicles for perpetuating harmful beauty ideologies.

04

Contemporary Relevance

Offers frameworks for understanding body image crises, colorism, and media representation in the 21st century.

REVIEW OF LITERATURE

Naomi Wolf (1990)

The Beauty Myth established the framework that beauty standards are tools of patriarchal control — directly applicable to Morrison's fictional world.

bell hooks (1992)

Black Looks: Race and Representation explores how media constructs Black identity, reinforcing Morrison's portrayal of internalized racial oppression.

Patricia Hill Collins (2000)

Black Feminist Thought addresses the matrix of domination — race, gender, class — that governs Black women's experiences of beauty and selfhood.

Michael Awkward (1989)

Inspiriting Influences analyzes Morrison's narrative strategies, noting her subversive use of the Dick-and-Jane primer as ideological critique.

RESEARCH METHODOLOGY

1	Approach:	Qualitative literary analysis using feminist critical theory and close reading methodologies.
2	Primary Source:	Toni Morrison's The Bluest Eye (1970) — full textual analysis with focus on characterization, narrative voice, and imagery.
3	Theoretical Framework:	Naomi Wolf's Beauty Myth theory; Kimberlé Crenshaw's Intersectionality; Patricia Hill Collins' Black Feminist Thought.
4	Secondary Sources:	Peer-reviewed journals, feminist scholarship, postcolonial criticism, and cultural studies literature.
5	Analytical Lens:	Examination of power structures, gender performance, racial coding, and self-perception through character studies.

ANALYSIS: THE BEAUTY MYTH IN ACTION

The Dick-and-Jane Primer as Ideological Apparatus

Morrison opens the novel by deconstructing the Dick-and-Jane reader — a symbol of white middle-class normalcy. As text fragments break apart progressively, she mirrors how dominant culture's beauty ideals fracture Black identity.

Pecola Breedlove

Embodies complete internalization of the beauty myth. Her desire for blue eyes represents the ultimate erasure of her Black identity — a wish to become someone the world deems worthy of love.

Claudia MacTeer

Represents counter-narrative resistance. Her rage at white baby dolls and Shirley Temple icons shows a nascent rejection of the beauty myth — later complicated by her own absorption into dominant culture.

Pauline Breedlove & the Cinema

Pauline's transformation through Hollywood films illustrates how popular media constructs beauty standards. She abandons her authentic self, prioritizing the Fisher family's white home over her own daughter — a direct consequence of beauty myth indoctrination.

FEMALE AGENCY & INTELLECTUAL AUTHORITY

Claudia as Narrator & Agent

Morrison grants Claudia dual authority: as a child narrator providing innocent observation, and as an adult reflecting with critical hindsight. This structure positions a Black girl as an intellectual authority — itself a subversive act in literary tradition.

★

Resistance Through Rage:

Claudia's destruction of white baby dolls is an act of intellectual refusal — she interrogates why the world values whiteness, demonstrating critical agency.

◆

Storytelling as Power:

By narrating Pecola's story, Claudia exercises the power of representation — countering silence with voice, and invisibility with witness.

●

Morrison's Own Agency:

The novel itself is an act of intellectual authority: Morrison centers Black female experience at a time when such stories were rendered invisible.

PATRIARCHAL CONSTRAINTS & SOCIAL HIERARCHY

Cholly Breedlove

Traumatized by white men who forced him to perform sexually, Cholly redirects his powerlessness onto his family — perpetuating a cycle where patriarchal violence descends the social hierarchy.

The Breedlove Home

Morrison uses the Breedloves' storefront home as a symbol of social exclusion. Their ugliness, she argues, is not innate but assigned — a product of how patriarchal society perceives and defines worth.

Geraldine's 'Colored' Identity

Geraldine represents the internalized patriarchal order: she polices her own Black femininity, despising dark-skinned Blacks while aspiring to white respectability — demonstrating how hierarchy is reproduced from within.

Soaphead Church

A self-appointed 'healer' who exploits vulnerable women, Soaphead personifies intellectual patriarchal authority weaponized against those with least power — including Pecola.

FEMALE SUFFERING & VICTIMIZATION

"Long hours she sat looking in the mirror, trying to discover the secret of the ugliness, the ugliness that made her ignored or despised at school, by teachers and classmates alike."

- Pecola's Psychological Disintegration:
  Pecola's eventual madness represents the terminal destination of the beauty myth — when a Black girl's reality offers no space for self-love, psychosis becomes the only refuge.

- Pauline's Emotional Abandonment:
  Pauline's preference for the Fisher family's white children over Pecola illustrates how the beauty myth creates complicity — mothers who abandon daughters to the same oppressive system.

- Rape as Ultimate Violence:
  Cholly's rape of Pecola crystallizes the novel's argument: physical, sexual, and psychological violence converge when those on the lowest rungs of patriarchal hierarchy have nowhere left to fall.

- Systemic Invisibility:
  Community's failure to protect Pecola reveals collective complicity. Her suffering is an open secret — a reflection of how society ignores those it has already deemed unworthy.

SUBVERSION THROUGH DISGUISE & GENDER PERFORMANCE

Feminine Masquerade

Joan Rivière's concept of 'womanliness as masquerade' applies powerfully to The Bluest Eye. Characters perform femininity not as authentic expression but as survival strategy within a patriarchal system that assigns value based on compliance with beauty norms.

Geraldine's performance of white middle-class femininity, Pauline's adoption of Hollywood's beauty scripts, and even Pecola's desperate wish for blue eyes all constitute performances that serve the patriarchal gaze rather than their own desires.

Resistance & Subversion

Morrison subtly encodes resistance within apparent compliance. The three prostitutes — China, Poland, and Miss Marie — reject social scripts entirely, embracing their outsider status and demonstrating that refusal of beauty myth performance is possible, even if costly.

Claudia's narrative voice itself performs subversion: by making a Black girl the intellectual center of the story, Morrison challenges the convention that such perspectives are peripheral or unworthy of serious literary attention.

RESTORATION OF ORDER & MORAL AUTHORITY

1

Restoration of Patriarchal Order

Unlike conventional narratives, Morrison refuses to restore patriarchal order. Pecola's tragedy is not resolved — she remains broken. Morrison challenges the reader to confront rather than comfort, denying cathartic restoration.

2

Morrison's Moral Stance

The novel's moral authority rests with Claudia, whose adult voice interprets events with clarity and guilt. She acknowledges the community's complicity — including her own — establishing an ethical framework based on honest reckoning.

3

Ethical Superiority of the Marginalized

Morrison positions Pecola, despite (or because of) her victimhood, as a moral mirror for society. Her madness forces readers to confront the collective responsibility for an individual's destruction.

4

Ideological Ambivalence

The novel holds multiple truths simultaneously: characters are victims and perpetrators, beauty both a prison and a longing. This ambivalence resists simple ideological resolution, reflecting the complexity of lived experience.

CONCLUSION

Toni Morrison's The Bluest Eye remains one of the most searching literary critiques of the beauty myth in American literature. Through its unflinching portrayal of Pecola Breedlove's destruction, the novel demonstrates how Eurocentric beauty standards function as a system of oppression that is simultaneously racial, gendered, and economic.

The novel's power lies in its refusal of easy resolution. Morrison does not offer redemption — she offers understanding. By giving voice to Black female suffering that dominant culture renders invisible, she enacts the very resistance she depicts.

Beauty myth is a tool of racial & gendered oppression

Morrison subverts canonical literary forms to center Black experience

Internalized racism destroys from within — a timeless warning

reading.

REFERENCES

1 Morrison, T. (1970). The Bluest Eye. Holt, Rinehart and Winston.

2 Wolf, N. (1990). The Beauty Myth: How Images of Beauty Are Used Against Women. William Morrow and Company.

3 hooks, b. (1992). Black Looks: Race and Representation. South End Press.

4 Collins, P. H. (2000). Black Feminist Thought: Knowledge, Consciousness, and the Politics of Empowerment. Routledge.

5 Awkward, M. (1989). Inspiriting Influences: Tradition, Revision, and Afro-American Women's Novels. Columbia University Press.

6 Crenshaw, K. (1989). Demarginalizing the intersection of race and sex. University of Chicago Legal Forum, 139–167.

7 Rivière, J. (1929). Womanliness as a masquerade. International Journal of Psycho-Analysis, 10, 303–313.

8 Washington, T. N. (2010). The Mother-Daughter Aje Relationship in Toni Morrison's The Bluest Eye. African American Review, 43(1), 29–46.

9 Dittmar, L. (1995). Will the Circle Be Unbroken? The Politics of Form in The Bluest Eye. Novel: A Forum on Fiction, 23(2), 137–155.